Dr. Debby Herbenick is a Professor at the Indiana University School of Public Health and Director of the Center for Sexual Health Promotion. For more than 20 years, Dr. Herbenick's research has focused on sexual health and behavior, population-representative research, and sexual pleasure – all studied through a feminist science lens. She has developed novel lines of scientific inquiry including genital self-image and its relationship to health, exercise-induced orgasm, as well as evolving shifts in sexual behavior and the health consequences of rough sex behaviors. The Female Genital Self-Image Scale has been translated into more than a dozen languages and is widely used in research and clinical work. Dr. Herbenick's research has received more than $7.6 million in support from individual philanthropists, private foundations (such as the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, The Patty Brisben Foundation, and The Case for Her) as well as federal support, including from NIH/NICHD. From 2016-2018, she served as the president of the American Association of Sexuality Educators, Counselors, and Therapists (AASECT). She is also an AASECT-certified sexuality educator.

Dr. Herbenick has published or has in-press more than 190 scientific articles in peer-reviewed journals and serves as PI on the award-winning National Survey of Sexual Health and Behavior, which is a collaborative project of researchers at the IU School of Public Health and IU School of Medicine. Her research has been cited more than 8000 times and she has published five general audience books about sexuality. Dr. Herbenick's research, books, and expertise have been featured in popular media including The New York Times, Washington Post, Wall Street Journal, Vogue, the Tyra Banks Show, the Tamron Hall Show, Discovery Health's Curiosity, the Emmy-nominated documentary Hot Girls Wanted, Peggy Orenstein's New York Times bestselling book Girls & Sex, and thousands of media articles and television shows.
